-Title	the Franco-Italian cooperation in the Alps facing the uncertainties of climate change
-Summary of the main contents	The coronavirus crisis has shown us how fragile our systems can be and how important it is to cooperate. Nowadays, our societies are faced with the risks caused by climate change, and mountain areas are among those most exposed to them. However, we believe that borders and mountains are territories particularly conducive to innovations in terms of public policies. I - The Alps: a particularly vulnerable territory in the face of global warming? Climate change has many consequences in the Alpine territories, not only in terms of the environment and the protection of biodiversity but also in economic and social terms. II - The many opportunities for action offered by cross-border cooperation French and Italian local actors have launched multiple actions in this field. If these appear necessary, they could be further developed.
